

Barry Donaldson

Barry loved playing card games.

He grew up as an only child living in an old lodge in Killiney, with relatively reserved parents. A quiet home, he spent much of his time reading in the garden and playing games. He loved bridge from when his friend, the late Tom Foley, first introduced him to it. A strategic mind, reading people and fiendish fun would always appeal to him.

Barry made many friends at Malahide Bridge club, which he cherished till he passed. When his health deteriorated because of a heart condition, and the resultant side effects, he found it frustrating not to play Bridge at the same level as he previously enjoyed and he dearly missed the challenge of the game and the companionship of the club.

We hope he is now enjoying a bridge game in heaven.

Rest in peace, Barry.
