

CSI Aylesbury

The pilot plot of a new crime series hits my desk

Characters

Jane

Promoted Chief Superintendent at 35, purely on merit, Jane balances running the squad with being the single parent of a teenage girl, with all the stresses and sub plots a good script writer can come up with.

Dudley

Known affectionately to all as Dudd, Dudley, a recovering and lapsing alcohol dependent DS near to retirement, he brings an older more sarcastic viewpoint to the show. Having seen it all, and more, he is seen as negative and less caring and sharing by some of the other squad members. Usually right in part, however.

Dwayne

The computer whiz kid. For security reasons Dwayne works away from the main office, and a tight firewall prevents Dwayne from answering any questions or from replying at all. Spends all day on the computer looking for “violations”

The Committee

A secretive body, whose function is to find guilty people brought before them by the “Board” this body functions in the twilight zone, between reality and a parallel universe.

The Spin Department

Making 1984 seem so out of date, this department is charged with making the odd surf boarding experience in Penzance seem like a routine confession.

As this pilot plot is so outlandish, with its emphasis on hounding the unintentionally guilty, rather than an encouraging, positive theme, can’t see it making prime time any time soon.

All characters appearing in this article are fictitious. Any resemblance to real persons, living or dead, is purely coincidental.
