

Guidelines for Filling Out your Name on your User Profile on BBO

What does CBAI and EBU say

“Ideally players should have their names available to their opponents (in their ‘profile’) or should give their names at the start of each round.”

What does BBO say

“You need not enter your real name in the registration form or your profile. The public portion of your profile (Name, country, skill level, other information) will be visible to every other member of the site”

Best Practice on CAVBC

1. Players should enter their names on their profile so that other players within CAVBC can see who they are playing with at a table.
2. Players should use the Chat function at the start of each round to greet each other and let their opponents know who they are by advising them of their first names
3. Players may not be comfortable with entering their real name on their BBO profile as this information is available to all other registered players on the BBO site. In this event such players must use the Chat function at the start of each round to advise their first name to their opponents.
