

Passing on the Boards

Failure to move the boards at the end of a round can be very disruptive.

If your table is still playing the cards after the director calls "move", dummy should be ready to move the completed boards to the next table, but only on demand.

If the next table is still in play, there is no point interrupting them to pass the boards.

If you are waiting to start at a table and the boards are not already there, a POLITE request to dummy on the next table for the completed board(s) should be sufficient.

Try and avoid just reaching across the table in play and retrieving the boards, or shouting at the table in play, thus disturbing their concentration.
